I understand that as a chaperone, I will be responsible for a specific group of students. The students understand that this is direct supervision, and that the students will need to stay with me during the field trip. I will contact the faculty member if students are uncooperative.

Some examples of direct supervision are, but are not limited to:
While on a bus, students must be in view of the chaperones.
On a ride, I will be present when they enter the ride, and the students will wait for me at the end of the ride.

At a museum, we will go together to exhibits.

If students need to use the restroom, they contact me, go with a buddy and return to me when they are finished.

At a bus rest stop, we will all go to the same establishment and return to the bus together.
